Even if you can't go out on national service, you have neighbours. Serve your neighbourhood. ☞

Happiness is increasingly considered the proper measure of human progress and the goal of public policy. Consequently, many governments are beginning to acknowledge that people's well-being, and not just economic growth, ought to be the focus of their efforts.

Almost everything we do in life is motivated by the desire to be happy. For most people, however, the experience of happiness is temporary. This is because their joy is based on external factors that may not be in their control.

The Bhagwad Gita says happiness derived from the senses and objects ultimately leads to sorrow. Since the sources of such happiness, be they objects, senses, other people or circumstances, are impermanent, the joy they provide cannot last forever. Bliss is the original nature of the soul, which is described as being 'sat, chit, anand swaroop', or the embodiment of truth, consciousness and bliss.
